The magistrates expressed a concern that one particular employee of the county was being ignored in making pay raises.

District 3 Magistrate Darrell Johnson noted that there was no pay raise included in the budget for Jailer James “Bo” Morris.

District 1 Magistrate Gerald Rader told Taylor he thinks it is “only fair” to include a pay raise for Morris in the budget.

Taylor said Morris is not included in the county’s pay increases because the Estill County Jail is a life safety jail. According to KRS 441.055, “those counties operating jails that have elected not to hold state prisoners,” are known as life safety jails.

Life safety jailers are not subject to pay raises in the same way that other county employees or elected officials are.

Pay raises for elected officials are mandated by the state and county employee raises are included in the budget that is approved by the fiscal court. However, for life safety jailers, like Morris, the fiscal court must set a pay raise and vote to approve the raise.

County Treasurer Ann Rogers told the court this is required by Kentucky Revised Statute. She also told the court there are regulations about when this can be voted on and changed.

County Attorney Rodney Davis advised the court to allow time to look up the KRS legislation and then make a decision.

Sheriff Gary Freeman addressed the court concerning a comment Taylor made at the April fiscal court meeting.

Freeman read a passage from an article printed in the May 3 issue of the Citizen Voice & Times. The article read, “Taylor also discussed the sheriff’s office. He said the court had paid for a deputy and overtime for that office. ‘We cannot continue to fund everything everybody asks for,’ he said.”

Freeman told the court he didn’t believe

Members of the road crew were present at the recent fiscal court meeting to hear discussion concerning the budget for next fiscal year. Currently, a 50 cent pay reaise for all county employees is included in the budget.

that asked for anything more than what is necessary to run his office and wasn’t sure why his office was used an example of something that could be cut to save the county money.

Taylor told Freeman that the amount of excess fees spent at the sheriff’s office was too much.

“When I first came here the excess fees were anywhere from $15,000 to $20,000,” he said. “Every year we give those excess fees back to you and every year since I’ve been here they have increased.”

Taylor said the sheriff’s excess fees are approximately $80,000 for the last fiscal year.

He also told the court there are other departments that are of concern besides the sheriff’s department. He told Freeman he was using him as an example, but he needs everyone to make cuts in necessary places.

“We are starving other departments and the jail is bleeding me dry,” Taylor said. “As a court we have to nail down on a lot of expenses.”

Taylor told the court all of this was stuff he had to consider when drafting the budget. The budget has be balanced and submitted by June 30. The court voted to approve the discussion last week as the first reading.

The court also discussed plans for updates to the park on Wiseman’s Crossing at Dry Ridge. The county received a $100,000 grant.

Taylor said the money would be used to build restrooms, trail heads and improvements to the existing trails. He also said he estimated there could be an estimated $40,000 spent on the county’s part for the park.

In other business, the court voted to

- accept the library budget
- accept the Chamberlain Branch budget
- accept the treasurer’s report
- accept an intrafund transfer of $74,000 from the general fund to the jail.

On the trail of Estill County barn quilts...

Located at 1005 Wagersville Road, the home of Sheila and Ray Richardson, this painted barn quilt was a birthday gift from Sheila’s sisters-in-law, Judy Woosley and Sherri Cole. ECHS basketball teams host camp at West Irvine

The young basketball players of Estill County attended a basketball camp this week at the new West Irvine Elementary School.

The camp, sponsored by Estill County High School's basketball program, began Monday at 8:30 a.m.

More than 50 children from kindergarten to fifth grade came to the newly constructed gymnasium for the program.

The boys and girls basketball players also came out to help the children learn the ropes.

John Bentley, Estill County High School boys' basketball coach, said the program helps the youth of Estill County learn basic skills required for the sport.

"Just to know fundamentals, know how to deploy a game, just to know how to get better," Bentley said. "It's just to develop fundamental skills."

Middle school students were also provided a camp session, which was held immediately after the elementary school program.

String of murders, shootings shows no value of human life

Last weekend I got one of those messages that make your stomach sink, your heart start racing and your mind start wondering in a thousand different directions.

An old friend had sent me a simple text message. One little sentence that ended with a question mark sparked a series of events in my life that have had me shaken for the past week.

“What’s going on on your street?” he asked. I wasn’t home and I instantly began to fear that something had happened to my family. I started sending texts to everyone asking if they were home, what was going on and if they were OK.

I eventually found out that our neighbors had been stabbed and two of them were dead, the third had been airlifted to UK to be treated for severe cuts, including one to her throat.

As information began to be told to police and neighbors, it became clear that a woman had killed her daughter and her granddaughter and the attempted to kill herself.

All of this happened just two doors down. In the early morning hours horrific things took place in that home and by the time I was home that night, my neighborhood had been turned into a scene that looked as if it was straight out of CSI.

I had never seen crime scene tape up close, let alone stretched across the yards of my own neighborhood.

I had always only heard of things like this happening, read about them in books or newspapers from across the country. It took a good few days before the seriousness of what had happened really hit me. I was very lucky to have been away from home when everything was happening.

My family watched as bodies were carried out while other neighbors gained a peak at the aftermath of the murder inside the home. I can’t imagine how I would be had I seen all of that.

It was a devastating blow to my hometown. But then, news started flooding in of all kinds of other murders and shootings just within the last week.

Two Powell County women were shot and killed by an angry ex-boyfriend. An Irvine man was shot by his own brother over a bottle of whiskey. Various shooting and murders in other towns like Danville, Georgetown and Louisville were also reported.

As a journalist, I have had to toughen my skin to things like this. However, it’s often difficult to just look away and pretend that things like this don’t effect me.

It really makes me wonder how the human life has possibly become so devalued. I was always taught that a human life was the most valuable thing.

From the looks of things, that’s no longer the case. Whiskey and vengeance seem to reign supreme to the lives of even one’s own family. In my opinion, that’s simply not OK.

Even with the tough skin of a journalist, it’s scary to think that the world has come to this. That for some, you can’t even let your guard down around your own family.

A beautiful young woman and her child were killed in their sleep and every time I drive past their former home, I will be reminded of that. I will be reminded that someone clearly didn’t value them in the way that they should have.

I only hope that when the people who committed these horrible crimes stand trial there is justice served for the victims. Maybe as they spend time in jail they will have the time to contemplate what they took from not only their victims, but from the rest of the population.

Not only the victims are effected by murders like those that have taken place this week. But those who loved them and those that were witness to the aftermath.

My family has been haunted by these mur-

"I had always only heard of things like this happening, read about them in books or newspapers."

ders. I literally can’t stop thinking about it. I wish that I could say that this is uncommon, unheard of or that things will change. But the sad truth is that the world is not as bright and cheerful as I once believed it to be.

I want my readers to know how grateful I am to be serving them and how much I would love to hear from them. If anyone has questions, comments or suggestions for the newspaper, please feel free to contact me at the office. I am available by phone at (606) 723-5161 or by email at whitney@hatfieldnewspapers.com.

Suicide case sheds light on bullying, discrimination

There’s one issue in this world that hurts me more than anything and that’s discrimination. I’m a firm believer than nobody should be discriminated against regardless of their race, gender, religious beliefs or sexual orientation.

If you have kept up with national news, you have probably heard the name Tyler Clementi mentioned a few times this past week.

He was an 18-year-old college student who committed suicide almost two years ago. His roommate, Dharun Ravi, left a webcam going in his room which resulted in him catching Clementi’s first sexual experience on video. This action pushed Clementi to jump off a bridge, which ended his life.

Ravi was sentenced to a mere 30 days in jail for this crime. Now, here’s the twist that I expect will change many people’s minds on this subject: Clementi was a gay male.

I do believe that Ravi should not be charged with Clementi’s suicide. You can’t charge Ravi for that, it’s unjustified. Clementi made the decision to end his life, not Ravi.

However, that is not my issue. My issue is this question I keep asking myself: What if Clementi was a female?

I can’t help but feel like the lack of action being done to punish Ravi has to do with the fact that Clementi was a homosexual. I’m sure if it was some 18-year-old girl who had her sex life violated, the consequences would have been much more severe.

More importantly, I’m sure our country would rally behind making sure the perpetrator was locked away for as long as possible.

"A man with his whole life ahead of him had it tragically ended because of hatred."

Our society’s double-standard is giving a message to today’s youth that you can bully someone into suicide and get away with it as long as they’re gay.

I know a lot of people are against homosexuality, but you can’t argue with the fact that someone is dead. A mother lost her child. A man with his entire life ahead of him had it tragically ended because of hatred.

Clementi isn’t the only example. There are millions of other people around the world, and even a handful in Estill County that are gay. And they feel alone because of teachers, pastors and family members telling them how they feel is wrong.

Actually, homosexuals are approximately five times more likely to attempt suicide than heterosexuals. And this loss of life is not necessary, especially when the solution is so simple.

Don’t preach a message of hate and fear into people’s lives, but instead a message of love and caring. If Clementi had felt he had someone to turn to, he might still be alive today.

The bottom line does not come down to any one person’s stance on homosexuality or bullying. It comes down to being a good-natured human being. Help out people who need it, regardless of their sexuality.

Gov. Beshear invites Kentuckians to tax reform meetings across state

We’ve held off modernizing Kentucky’s tax code for several years now, not wanting to jeopardize the beginning stages of our recovery from the global economic recession.

With the recovery taking firm hold, however, the time has arrived to move our tax system into the 21st Century.

Led by Lt. Gov. Jerry Abramson, the 23 members of the Governor’s Blue Ribbon Commission on Tax Reform have been meeting for several months to familiarize themselves with the strengths and weaknesses of our tax system, to look at other states and to examine the dozen studies and evaluations of Kentucky taxes that have been performed since 1982.

Now it’s your turn to weigh in.

Beginning next Tuesday, the commission will be holding meetings around the state to hear what Kentuckians think about our tax code – where it needs to be changed, where it must be improved.

Meetings will be in Paducah, Bowling Green, Louisville, Highland Heights (on Northern Kentucky University’s campus), Prestonsburg and Lexington. For locations and times, look on the web site ltgovernor.ky.gov/taxreform under “public meeting schedule”.

If you can’t make it to a meeting, you can still voice your opinion by clicking on “public comments”.

Whether you’re a teacher, a small-business owner, a college student, a steelworker or a part-time short-order cook, we want to hear from you. We need to hear from you.

I could easily have put the task of modernizing Kentucky’s tax code solely in the hands of economic experts. But this isn’t an academic, esoteric exercise set up to posit theoretical arguments about ideal tax structures.

It’s an exercise that recognizes that the power of taxation is a living, breathing, mechanism with tangible impact on people’s lives – both those who are taxed, and those who use services funded by those taxes.

Atomic plant site possible here
Irvine, Ravenna and Estill County has been suggested to Colonel Dean of the Atomic Energy Commission, by the Industrial Development Board of Frankfort, as one of the possible sites for an atomic plant, and with the assistance of other organizations and corporations up and down the Kentucky River, we find in the last few days that we have as good a chance, from the hearsay of other heads of different departments, for the location of this plant in Estill County as of any other place in the state of Kentucky, since we have all the necessary things that go about to get a plant like this. It does seem that this would be a large thing for this community, and the question has arisen, where would the additional workers be housed? But we have been advised by other sources that trailer camps are used in cases of this kind during the building of different plants, and that will not be a problem in case the plant is located here.
If this site should be selected for a plant, we have been advised that some 30,000 workers would be required to build the atomic plant covering 6,000 acres, more or less, and after the plant is installed, it will employ some five- to six- thousand people.

To be rated Comprehensive, a school must have its superintendent with certain qualifications, its staff certified, an enrollment of at least 600, with a wide variety of course offerings, have adequate physical facilities, and maintain a quality instructional program. Estill County High met these requirements, according to a survey team from the State Department that examined the school last fall.

Witt retires
The signs have been changed and the new cars are gone. Mary Louise Witt is closing a page of life and looking forward to a new one.
She is retiring as the Ford-Buick dealer here after 11 years of running the business begun in the 50s by her husband, Glenn Witt, who died in 1971.
No one has qualified for the dealership she said, and there still is an opening, but for now, John Puckett will take over the facility with Puckett Ford Tractor and implement dealership.

Winkler selected to represent Estill County at ELI summer leadership program

Estill County High School student Jay Winkler has been selected to attend The Center for Rural Development’s 2012 Entrepreneurial Leadership Institute (ELI) summer youth leadership program. He will have a unique opportunity to grow his business and entrepreneurial skills as a representative of the region’s next generation of leaders. Students will attend ELI during the week of June 10-15 held on the grounds of The Center in Somerset, where they will work with business professionals to receive the tools to launch a start-up business. “ELI focuses on creativity, teamwork and the development of business skills, and encourages participants to consider starting their own business as a career option,” Lonnie Lawson, president and CEO of The Center, said. “Many of these students will utilize the skills they learn during the week at ELI to become the region’s next generation of business leaders and entrepreneurs.” During the week, ELI participants work together in teams to develop a business plan and present that plan to a panel of potential investors in a business concept competition on the final day of the program. The winning team members of ELI’s Business Concept Competition are eligible to receive a Presidential Scholarship from Eastern Kentucky University in Richmond. “We look forward to working with these young, aspiring leaders of Southern and Eastern Kentucky,” Delaney Stephens, youth programs coordinator and community liaison of The Center, said. “By giving participants hands-on training, they receive tools that will help them achieve their business and career goals.” High school freshmen, sophomores, and juniors within The Center’s 42-county primary service area are eligible to apply for ELI. Program expenses (excluding transportation costs to and from the host site) are provided free of charge to participants and their parents. Winkler is the son of Chris and Judy Winkler.

“Slow” food gives new respect for the “good ol’ days”

Whew! Didn't this Memorial Day feel more like the Fourth of July?

The heat made the swimming pool tempting though, and I'll bet my hide wasn't the only one to get a little sunburned.

There's another down side to these summery days. My salad peas are beginning to dry up already, and the strawberries are gone too.

We've got broccoli, cauliflower, green onions, lettuce, kale and radishes big enough to eat, most of which prefer cooler weather, so the heat is making them look a little distressed.

In the spirit of summer, though, we decided to try our hand at making homemade ice cream on Sunday afternoon. We gathered all our equipment: an electric churn, ice, salt, milk, sugar and vanilla. (I decided to make Philly-style ice cream—no raw eggs for me, thanks!)

After filling the can and packing ice around it in the wooden tub, we discovered the churn motor wouldn't work.

It's a good thing we had a hand crank that fit the churn.

A half an hour of manual labor later, we felt like we deserved a sweet treat. We had to eat the ice cream fast before it melted, and yes, it was pretty darned good.

Making homemade ice cream requires a lot of ice, which reminded me of a couple of Chelsea's interviews for the oral history project she's working on for Berea College.

By LISA BICKNELL
CV&T Staff Writer

My parents told how the ice truck would make deliveries in rural areas back in the 40s and 50s before electricity came to some parts of the county.

My dad said folks would set signs out in their yards if they wanted ice, and the signs specified the amount of ice they wanted—a 25 lb. block, a 50 lb. block, or even larger.

Some folks had ice boxes, which looked like primitive refrigerators but worked like coolers. Mom said that by the time a person put a big chunk of ice in the ice box, there wasn't room for much of anything else.

If folks wanted to make ice cream, they had to chip some ice off the old block to fill their hand-cranked ice cream makers.

This is just one example of how food preparation required so much more work a few decades ago than it does today.

These days, if we want ice cream, we just pick up a carton at the store or drive through one of the fast-food lanes. The only effort it costs us is what we expend when we fork over the money to pay for it.

If we had to hand crank our ice cream every time, I wonder how often we'd want it?

Still, the “slow food movement” is becoming quite trendy, as more people desire to learn the old skills that our parents and grandparents depended on to raise their families.

Isn't it funny how everything old eventually becomes new again?

Addie Mae Bicknell, my husband's grandmother and “Granny” to almost everyone who knows her—raised her ten children in a small home with a wood cook stove, no modern plumbing and no electricity.

She and her husband, Leonard, lived pretty much the same way their parents and grandparents did.

Granny's still going strong at 92, and although Papa's been gone for several years now, he lived a good long life too.

Like the majority of rural folks of their time, they raised big gardens and “put up” for the winter everything they couldn't eat fresh.

They stored their potatoes in a trench in the barn floor and covered them with hay so they wouldn't freeze. They lowered milk into a stone-lined dug well to keep it cool.

They butchered their own chickens as they needed them, but they had to wait until cold weather to kill hogs. They salted down the hams and sides of bacon so they'd have meat to eat until next season's hog-killin' time.

“We used everything but the squeal,” my dad says, whose family's food history is very similar.

“Slow food” was a way of life, at least for rural folks, and they didn't have much of a choice about it. The majority of their waking hours were spent providing food for the table.

Fast forward fifty years and think about how little time typically is invested in preparing meals these days. It only takes a few minutes to make a stop at a drive thru or nuke something in the microwave.

Even for those who prefer to cook, compare a visit to the grocery where we can grab a roast or chicken and a few vegetables to take home and prepare on gas or electric ranges. Most folks pop the dirty dishes in a dish washer, and the whole process takes a couple of hours at most. Sometimes we complain about having to do that much.

I'll have to admit, I don't mind doing a lot of things the old fashioned way. Even though bugs bite and picking can be an uncomfortably itchy job, I love going out to the garden to see what I can find for dinner.

There's something very satisfying about harvesting food you've planted with your own hands. Besides, I feel better knowing that our food hasn't been sprayed with toxins.

Many lifestyles simply don't have room for slow food, but I think there's a valuable lesson in doing things the hard way every now and then.

It makes us appreciate the conveniences we have—and the fact that we have a choice whether to take our food on the go...or slow.

ENCOURAGING WORD:
AN APPROPRIATE DEPICTION OF LIFE

Howard Coop
Guest Columnist

Television commercials, as a general rule, are not very interesting. To me, some of them are downright boring and pointless. While some of them may be humorous and catch one's attention, there are times when one wants to, and sometime does, hit the mute button until they are finished. However, I saw one commercial recently that was different. It caught, and held, my attention, for it had a powerful message about real life, one so powerful that it caused me to failed to take note of the product or service that it was promoting.

In that commercial, a young man, casually dressed and apparently happy, was walking down a hallway toward a closed door. When he arrived at the door, he placed his hand on the doorknob, opened it and walked through it. When he came out on the opposite side of that door, he was wearing a tuxedo. With a radiant smile on his face, he looked down a hallway toward a lovely young lady dressed in a beautiful bridal gown. They met at the altar of the church, and after the ceremony, they walked arm in arm down the isle toward another door. They were the epitome of happiness. As they approached the door, it opened, and they went through it. When they came out on the other side, they were casually dressed, and it was obvious that time had passed. Streaks of gray were visible in their hair, and the lady was in a wheelchair. The man was pushing it down the hallway toward another door.

That, I thought, is an appropriate depiction of everyday life as we know it. Many mysteries are awaiting us, and uncertainty is a reality. Facing one door after another, we do not know for sure what's on the other side, but regardless of that uncertainty, we open that door and proceed through it. Along the way, we enjoy pleasant experiences and strive to overcome difficulties.
